There are also plenty of fun family activities offered throughout the Cancun resort community, from swimming with dolphins in the Caribbean to water slides and surf simulators.

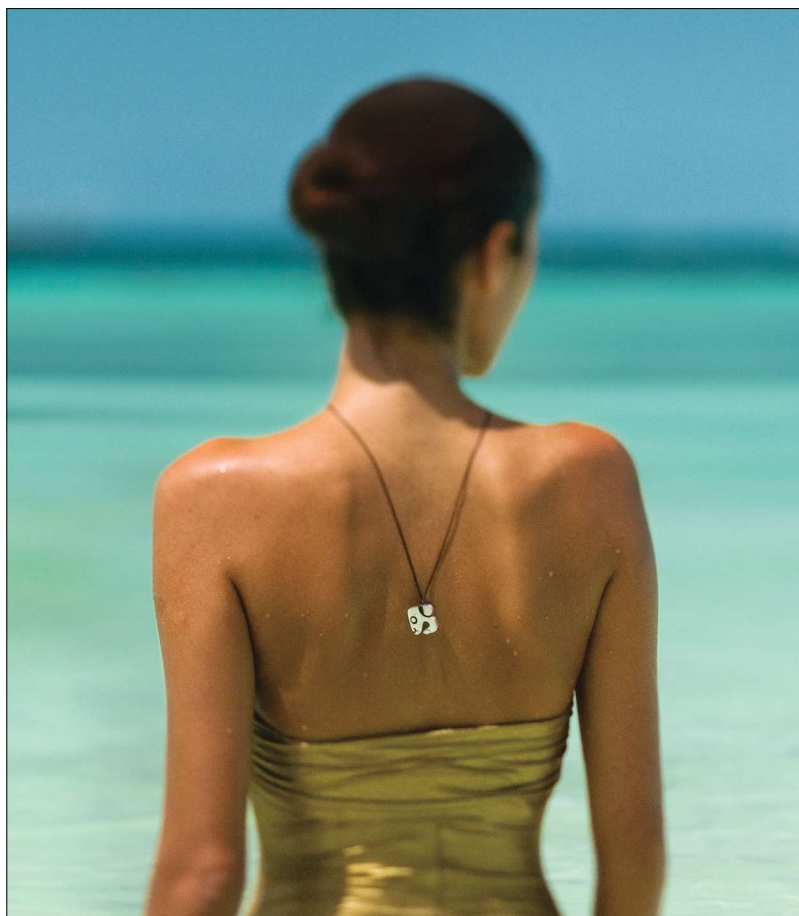

Part of the plan for all of these tourist segments is golf, which is now a mainstay of the Cancun tourist scene. There are more than 10 courses in the area – by designers such as Jack Nicklaus, Greg Norman and Robert Trent Jones – with more planned in coming years. The new TPC Cancun facility near the airport is the first course to bear the TPC name outside of the U.S., and golfers have seen nearby courses to the south thanks to Golf Channel’s “Big Break Mexico” and coverage of the PGA TOUR’s OHL Classic at Mayakoba.

Whatever brings you to Cancun, you’ll enjoy the same benefits as your fellow travelers to this vacation paradise. For example, Cancun International Airport offers more airlift than any other airport in the Caribbean, making it easy to find flights from cities throughout the U.S. and Latin America. Most U.S. travelers can have breakfast at home and be on the beach in Cancun by early afternoon thanks to the number of flights available. Cancun’s variety and number of resort options – including more than 34,000 hotel rooms – also offer the chance to find exactly what you’re looking for in terms of price, location and experience.

As Cancun continues to grow in its fourth decade as a premier destination, it continues to evolve. If you’ve been to Cancun in the past, it’s time to come back for another look. And if you’ve never been, what are you waiting for? And make sure you bring your golf clubs! ■

Cancun has greatly diversified its image as a vacation destination, as it now offers many options for families (top left), golfers (bottom left) and spa enthusiasts (above).
